

The Sly Fox

Once, a fox saw a deer. The sly fox called a mouse and a tiger to help him. Together, they planned to kill the deer. The mouse nibbled the deer's feet, while the tiger pounced upon him and killed the deer. The fox said, "We should not eat anything before taking a bath. I have taken a bath.

Now it's your turn."

When the tiger returned from his bath, the fox said, "The mouse boasted that it was he who killed the deer and that he should get the bigger share". The tiger's pride was hurt and he went away. When the mouse came, he said, "I challenged the tiger to a fight, he fled. Now it's your turn." The mouse escaped from the spot. The fox ate the flesh all alone.

Moral: Cunning surpasses strength.
